

The Atlantic Group of Builders: A History

1980

The Atlantic Group of Builders was established by brothers Jerry and Nathaniel Hawthorne, top performing students at the North Cale School of Architecture.

1985

Operations began shortly after, when all business permits and other essential documents were finally approved by the government. During the wait, the brothers began establishing connections in the industry.

1990

The Atlantic Group of Builders began taking on projects from small homes to medium-sized supermarkets. Their clients consisted mostly of friends of the family who immediately offered their full support.

1995

Contract after contract came, and more clients began seeing the company's innovative and timeless approach to design. Soon enough, the team grew (from a team of five to a team of twelve!) and more improvements to the operations were made.

2000

The Hawthorne brothers formed a strong partnership with their trusted colleagues' engineering firm. This elevated their architecture and construction business, making them the city's most prominent.

2008

More employees were welcomed aboard, resulting in a widely successful company expansion - one that would reach international clients and bring forth bigger projects such as housing units, shopping malls, and even four-star resorts.

2010

Now, with the involvement of technology, The Atlantic Group of Builders has claimed the top spot in the country's architecture and property development industry.

2020

As the company continues to produce top quality output for industrial, commercial, and real estate properties, more charities have also been added to the list of beneficiaries. Proudly a philanthropic team, The Atlantic Group of Builders strives to do more as each year passes.
